Story

Lily, Sam, Poppy, Kally and Dan were all round at Dan's house one miserable, wet day and couldn't decide what to do. After a little while, the friends became very bored. "What shall we do?" asked Kally. "Let's play with the cars and the garage," suggested Sam. "No, that's boring," replied Poppy. "I know, we can play tig and bounce on the bed," she said. "We can't do that!" cried Lily. "Dan's mummy will be very cross," she said.

What could the friends do?

"I know," said Kally. "Why don't we make our own puppet show?" she asked. "How can we do that?" asked a rather grumpy Sam, who didn't appear at all interested in anything Kally had to say. "Dan! Go and ask your mummy if she has any lolly sticks," Kally ordered. Dan ran off to ask his mummy and quickly returned with a handful of them.

What did Kally want the lolly sticks for?

Kally suggested that they all talk about their favourite stories. "Mine's Little Red Riding Hood," said Sam. "Well mine's Goldilocks and the Three Bears," shouted Poppy excitedly. "Ooh, ooh, what about The Gingerbread Man?" suggested Lily. "My favourite story is 'The Magic Faraway Tree,'" said Dan. After deciding which story they would perform, the five friends settled down drawing, colouring and cutting out characters, as well as trees and a house for the background scenery. They stuck the characters onto the lolly sticks so that they could make them move during the puppet show. All the friends added their own sense of humour and fun in their retelling of their story, as Sam put on a gruff voice, Lily had a squeaky voice, Kally sang and twittered like little birds in the trees, Poppy spoke in a mummy kind-of-voice and Dan in a daddy kind-of-voice. After their performances, the friends laughed and giggled their way downstairs for a scrummy tea.
